The worst one I ever saw was a guy I worked with. He was installing a gas stove and needed a 1/4" hole in the floor. He decided his Ruger Blackhawk was .357" and that would suffice. He leaned in behind the stove with his head between the tin stove and the wall and placed the muzzle of the .357 Magnum on the floor. When he fired the revolver, his head ricocheted back and forth between the stove and the wall. He could not hear for about 2 weeks and he had numerous contusions and abrasions on his head.

I was there when the guy shot the .357 behind the stove. He did so on my most strenuous objections.
